

These are some of the figures that were used to show what you could do in the game. There are loads of possibilities for what could be done in the game but it had to be done in the same register or else it wouldn't work. He said what he was supposed to say at the start of the mission but you have to make sure you are paying attention or else you will miss all the possibilities for what can be done in the game but to be honest it didn't make all that much difference after that.

Below me are some of the images from the beach that they designed and I helped to design to say somewhere where you could be on a nice afternoon or something. The palm trees represent the ability to relax and the nice blue sea is like the nice blue sea I remember. It didn't really exist because that was okay because everyone knew what a simulation was capable of so if they went oh wait is that a real beach I could say no it wasn't but now I guess I probably wouldn't be able to say that or anything because what difference would it make. You might look at this and go wow but that is the wrong reaction. It is digital decay or something but I don't like saying that because I know that somewhere it still exists somewhere even if I or someone else is not there or for whatever reason becomes unaware of the beach

